About TCFV
Join TCFV in our efforts to GO PURPLE.

Counties indicated in white had one or more family violence fatalities in 2017. Purple counties experienced no fatalities during that time.

ONE IN EVERY 10 HOMICIDES IN TEXAS is perpetrated by a man killing his former or current female intimate partner.

For 38 years, the Texas Council on Family Violence has identified women killed by male intimate partners to both honor their memories and raise awareness. During that time, more than 100 women have lost their lives each year. These statistics represent women remembered for brightening the lives of those around them as loving mothers, caring family members, and dedicated friends.

“She was a beautiful soul—very kind, very loving.”

TCFV publishes narratives of each fatality as well as analysis of demographic, outcome, and risk factor information to tell the individual and collective stories of the women killed. These data points offer a critical lens with which to examine domestic violence issues in the state of Texas and drive our response to predicting lethality and preventing violence.

PARTICIPATE IN HELPING TEXAS GO PURPLE. Communities across Texas are working towards increasing victim safety and batterer accountability and implementing new, innovative approaches to preventing domestic violence. To join these efforts, connect with us at www.tcfv.org.

136 women were killed by a male intimate partner in 42 Texas counties in 2017.

“She will be remembered for her love, laughter, and her devotion to her family.”
FORWARD

Since 1978, the Texas Council on Family Violence has been regarded as the statewide expert, think tank and training entity to community based domestic violence agencies and intersecting systems. More specifically, for the last 38 years, TCFV has documented and analyzed the deaths of women by a male intimate partner. What began as a “Grim Talley” so many years ago of women killed has now evolved to a robust analysis of Honoring Texas Victims Report with strong recommendations to spark change in policy, practice, and training.

As we enter our 40th year in this work and present the findings of this report, we must acknowledge severe events which occurred in a 12-month period which also overlaps with this Report’s timeline and its publication. We would be remiss in our responsibility in not elevating awareness, the consequences, and impact of these significant events—three mass shootings.

At no other time in history, has Texas experienced three mass shootings, let alone, with a direct connection to domestic and dating violence. The state and nation reeled from these events that gave us an all-too-close look at the far reach and devastation of domestic and dating violence.

Sunday, September 10, 2017, in Plano, Meredith Hight hosted several friends at her home to watch a football game. She had filed for divorce in July. Meredith, 27, and seven friends were killed; her husband killed by police who responded. We capture Meredith’s death and those of Rion Morgan, 31, Tony Cross, 33, Olivia Deffner, 24, James Dunlop, 29, Darryl Hawkins, 22, Myah Bass, 28, and Caleb Edwards, 25. We noted all victims were under the age of 34. We were convinced this event was an anomaly.

Sunday, November 5, 2017 in the small, rural community of Sutherland Springs at the First Baptist church, 26 people were killed and an additional 20 injured. This small community was devastated by the brutality of a known domestic violence offender determined to hurt his former wife and her mother. And we learned of inadequate and deficient systems to keep firearms from a prohibited possessor. The victims ranged in age from an unborn child to 77-year-old grandmother. The community lost Annabelle Pomeroy, 14, Keith Allen Braden, 62, Robert and Shani Corrigan, both 51, Dennis and Sara Johnson, 77 and 68, Haley Krueger, 16, Robert and Karen Marshall, both 56, Tara McNulty, 33, Ricardo and Therese Rodriguez, 64 and 66, Joann Ward, 30 and her two daughters Brooke, 5, and Emily, 7, Peggy Lynn Warden, 56, and Lula Woicinski White, 71. The Holcomb family lost nine family members: Bryan, 60, wife Karla, 58, Danny, 36, and his daughter, 1, Crystal, 36 and her four children, Megan,9, Emily, 11, Greg, 13 and unborn child. Unfortunately, our report does not include any of the victims, as this report centers on the deaths of women killed by their current or former intimate partner.

Friday, May 18, 2018, in the rural suburban community of Santa Fe, Texas, 10 people were killed, eight students and two teachers; another thirteen injured. One of the victims killed, Shana Fisher, 16, had fended the shooter’s unwanted advances for months. Her mother believes the incident embarrassed him so much he targeted Shana. She and the other victims, Jared Conrad Black, 17, Christian Riley Garcia, 15, Aaron Kyle McLeod, 15, Angelique Ramirez, 15, Sabika Sheikh, 17, Christopher Stone, 17, Kimberly Vaugh, 14, Glenda Ann Perkins, 64, and Cynthia Tinsdale, 63 are also not included in this report as this tragedy occurred in 2018. Shana was not in a consensual dating relationship to the shooter.

Of intentional note, the names of the shooters are not found here. These three mass shootings underscored that our homes, our schools and even our places of worship are not safe from domestic and dating violence. The Texas Council on Family Violence is known for lifting the voices of survivors through the agencies that serve them. In this forward, we pay honor to the victims listed here, whose voices will live in perpetuity propelling us in our commitment to create a safer Texas.

IDENTIFYING TRENDS TO INFORM DOMESTIC VIOLENCE RESPONSES

Intimate partner homicides in Texas tracked annually in this report are part of a global epidemic of violence against women. Recent data released by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) report an average of 137 women across the world are killed every day by an intimate partner or family member. In 2017, a woman in Texas was killed every 2.5 days, contributing 136 deaths to the worldwide total. The UNODC report determined that 34% of female homicide victims are killed by an intimate partner; previous estimates by the World Health Organization project that 38% of women are killed by an intimate partner. These trends are reflected in Texas, where 39% of women killed in 2017 died at the hands of their current or former male intimate partner.

In 2017, law enforcement officers in Texas responded to 195,315 incidents of family violence; approximately 40% of these incidents were intimate partner violence. Women and girls comprised 72% of victims of family violence. Fourteen percent of family violence assaults (28,125) were classified as aggravated assault, typically involving the use of weapons, strangulation, or more serious injurious assaults. Four percent of assaults against law enforcement officers (180) occurred while responding to family violence calls.

In the United States, rates of women killed by men have dropped from 1.57 per 100,000 women in 1996 to 1.20 per 100,000 women in 2016, as tracked by the Violence Policy Institute in their annual reports When Men Murder Women.

Risk Across Lifespan: Age of Victims

The ages of women killed by their intimate partners in 2017 range from the youngest teen victim, Tristan Dilley, 14, shot and killed by her boyfriend, Paul Adams, 19, in her home in Jasper County to the oldest victim, Ella Brown, 84, shot and killed by her husband, James Brown, 90, in her home in Fort Bend County. Across women’s lifespan, intimate partner violence poses a grave threat.

Women between the ages of 20-29 (33) and 30-39 (33) represent the highest number of victims year after year. The number of homicides in each age group increases for women between the ages of 25-34 in particular. Women in this age range represent about 14% of the female population in the state, but 30% of women killed in 2017; victims included 22 women between the ages of 25-29 and 20 women between the ages of 30-34. As noted in prior Honoring Texas Victims reports, women in their mid-twenties and early thirties generally represent the largest group of women seeking help from family violence services and seeking legal remedies to end relationships. Women ages 25-34 represented 30% of women seeking a divorce in Texas in 2015, the most recent year statistics are available; women ages 25-36 represented 41.1% of the Texas contacts to the National Domestic Violence Hotline.
Violence Hotline and 35.5% of the Texas contacts to Love Is Respect, National Dating Abuse Helpline in 2017.\(^8\)

As noted in the 2016 Honoring report, women between the ages of 30-39 represented the highest number of victims in 2010-2013 and again in 2015. However, the number of victims between the ages of 20-29 and 30-39 have become more level over the last eight years, and in 2017, the number of women ages 40-49 (30) is approaching the same level as the 20-29 and 30-39 age ranges (33 each).

The trends of rising numbers of fatalities in later stages of life continue. The number of victims ages 50-59 (19) exceeded the high level of women killed in this age bracket in 2016 (18), while the number of women killed between ages 60-69 (7) increased from 2016 (6) and reached the highest level since 2013 (9). The number of women killed over the age of 70 reached the second highest level in recent years.

Investing in Forward Thinking Approaches:
Family Violence Service Providers Partner with Colleges and Universities

TCFV analyzes data on the ages of victims and perpetrators to identify interventions and opportunities for and by specific age. As an example, in a prior edition of Honoring Texas Victims, recognizing that women in child-bearing ages were particularly statistically present, we identified health care providers, family physicians, and OB/GYN as uniquely positioned as early interveners when appropriately equipped and trained. Our analysis materialized in a legislatively mandated task force to further build an intervention approach.

This edition we focus on opportunities to bolster safety for college-age women. In 2017, four tragic incidents reinforced the importance of engaging colleges and universities in our communities’ responses to domestic violence. Cayley Mandadi was beaten, sexually assaulted, and killed by her boyfriend in Schertz. Zuzu Verk was assaulted and killed by her boyfriend in Alpine, and Molly Matheson was strangled, sexually assaulted, and killed by her former dating acquaintance in Fort Worth. Janeera Gonzalez was shot and killed by a man who had stalked and pursued a dating relationship with her. Each woman was an active student at her local college or university, and the abuse and violence impacted the campuses directly.

Local family violence service providers are keenly aware of the risks and challenges college-age women experience within their communities. Educational institutions can engage these programs for expertise, service provision, education, and resources as communities come together to support young women experiencing intimate partner violence. Two local family violence service providers have had unique success in building partnerships with colleges and universities: Family Crisis Center of East Texas and Guadalupe Valley Family Violence Shelter.

The Family Crisis Center of East Texas partners with Angelina College and Stephen F. Austin State University (SFA). The Family Crisis Center began its partnership with SFA in 2014 and currently provides a university-based advocate on campus 45 hours a week. The university advocate provides fundamental advocacy services to students and serves as an on-call advocate for the University Police Department. Similarly, the Guadalupe Valley Family Violence Shelter has developed strong partnerships with Texas Lutheran University. An advocate provides support services and outreach education on campus one day a week. Both programs participate in university-based coordinated community response teams, which are comprised of victim services agencies, law enforcement, prevention services, and student conduct offices.

Both universities received an Office on Violence Against Women Campus Program grant that specifically requires “the university to create effective, comprehensive responses to sexual assault, domestic violence, dating violence and stalking. This comprehensive approach includes both prevention and intervention and requires a multi-faceted, coordinated effort that engages key stakeholders from the surrounding community and throughout the campus.” Each family violence service provider reports that while they had strong relationships with their local universities prior to the grant award, the funding awards have furthered their partnerships and made them more collaborative and sustainable.

As part of the collaborations, the family violence service providers offer programming to students, including trainings at new student orientations for all incoming students and awareness month events throughout the year. Guadalupe Valley Family Violence Services participates in a “Don’t Cancel Class” initiative, which provides professors the opportunity to schedule trainings and presentations with the family violence service providers, in lieu of canceling a class.

Higher educational institutions recognize that sexual harassment, stalking, dating violence, and unwanted sexual contact deeply affect a student’s ability to learn, grow, thrive and achieve their educational goals while attending college. ❞ 9

Universities that prioritize domestic violence and sexual assault prevention and intervention efforts can interrupt the impact of violence and abuse on students’ ability to take full advantage of the opportunity college affords them. The efforts of these two universities exemplify the importance and potential of actively working in partnership with family violence services providers to support students within their campuses.

Victim Relationship to Perpetrator

The most common relationship between the victim and perpetrator was wife and husband (48%), which includes relationships categorized as common-law marriages, as well as married victims and perpetrators who separated prior to the homicides. Boyfriend and girlfriend relationships comprised 30% and former boyfriend-girlfriend relationships comprised 13% of cases. And while divorced couples comprise the smallest percentage of cases at 7%, it is noteworthy because of the length of time that it takes to legally dissolve a marriage, which requires survivors toremain in contact with abusive ex-partners for an extended time period. The relationship status in three cases were categorized as other: two cases involved casual dating partners, and one case included a victim of stalking who did not consent to a relationship with the perpetrator.

Leaving does not equal safety:
37% of women killed had made attempts or were planning to end their relationships.

In 29% of cases reviewed in 2017, violence in the relationship was a known issue; this includes all cases where relatives or friends reported knowing about the violence and cases where law enforcement had been involved. Thirty-seven percent of women killed in 2017 had made attempts to end their relationships or were in the process of ending the relationships when they were murdered.11

In 2017, perpetrators killed 87 women who were mothers, resulting in 211 adults and minor children losing one or more parents. Of those who lost parents, at least 64% were children, teens, and young adults.12 Two women were pregnant when they were killed.

Survivors of family violence often make difficult decisions when balancing their safety concerns with needs to remain in contact with their abusive ex-partners. Custody exchanges and decision making around co-parenting frequently require ongoing contact. Sadly, perpetrators of family violence use these necessary contacts to maintain any measure of control, and there are often devastating outcomes. 2017 was no exception—Maria Carolina Alvarez Pantoja was killed in Kilgore after Juan Vazquez used child visitation to lure her to his home; Crystal Seratte McDowell was killed by her ex-husband Steve McDowell when she went to his home to pick up her children and evacuate in preparation for Hurricane Harvey.

11 This includes women who had reconciled after prior attempts to end their relationships.
12 Of those whose ages are known, 136 were children, teens, or young adults.
Young adults refers to those within an age range that indicates likely dependent status.
A Look at Men Who Killed Their Partners

The youngest perpetrator of intimate partner homicide in 2017 was Cedarrius Blake, 18, who shot and killed his ex-girlfriend Tresten Gray in her vehicle in Lufkin. The oldest perpetrator was Byron Everts, 91, who shot and killed his wife Dulce in their home in Galveston. Offenders ages 40-49 (32) represent the most prevalent age group, followed by those ages 30-39, and then by those ages 20-29. The age of one perpetrator was not made publicly available.

Murder Suicide and Familicide

Seventy-six perpetrators (55%) have had involvement in the criminal justice system since committing the homicides. Fifty-six perpetrators (41%) committed suicide. Law enforcement officers killed three perpetrators.

76 CHARGED/CONVICTED
56 COMMITTED SUICIDE
3 KILLED BY POLICE

Fifty-six perpetrators committed suicide at the time they murdered their current or former intimate partners. Of those, eighty-eight percent (50) of perpetrators used a firearm to kill themselves; eighty-two percent (47) used a firearm to kill their current or former intimate partner. Use of a firearm is the leading cause of suicide in the United States, and rates of firearm suicide are higher in Texas.13

In this analysis, familicide describes incidents when the perpetrator kills his current or former intimate partner and one or more of the couple’s children prior to committing suicide. In 2017, two perpetrators committed familicide. Christopher Weiss shot and killed his ex-girlfriend Valerie Martinez and their daughter Azariah, 1, in Waco. Jefferson Stovall shot and killed his wife Penny Stovall and their daughter Makenzie, 8, in their home in Navarro County.

Analysis demonstrates the incidence of a perpetrator committing suicide after killing an intimate partner increases with age. One perpetrator who was 19 (that is, 25% of the perpetrators under 20 years of age) committed suicide. Twenty-six percent of perpetrators between the ages of 20-29 committed suicide, and 33% of those between the ages of 30-39 committed suicide. The trend continues with 44% of perpetrators between the ages of 40-49 and 48% of perpetrators between the ages of 50-59, and it becomes more evident as incidence of suicide increases with 67% of perpetrators between the ages of 60-69 and over the age of 70 committing suicide.

Since 2012, the prevalence of suicides among the general population in Texas has steadily increased from 12.0:100,000 to 12.9:100,000, following similar trends nationwide.\textsuperscript{14} In analysis of recent data, men in Texas were 3.4 times more likely than women to commit suicide.\textsuperscript{15} Among the general population in the state, people between the ages of 45-64 years represent the largest proportion of those who commit suicide.\textsuperscript{16}

Risk Factors & Domestic Violence Offender Accountability

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found that 10% of victims of intimate partner violence homicides experienced some form of violence in the month preceding the murders.\textsuperscript{17} These incidents offer opportunities for intervention to expand survivor safety. In 2017, 29% of perpetrators (40) had a known history of violence, though TCFV identified only 14 cases with known criminal justice system engagement prior to the homicides in 2017. Those include three perpetrators on probation at the time, one who received deferred adjudication, six offenders who were released on bond or had pending charges, and at least two victims with protective orders.

Perpetrators tend to pose the highest risk of lethal violence in the days, weeks, and months immediately following the ending of a relationship or being involved in a criminal justice system intervention.\textsuperscript{18} In the 2016 analysis, TCFV determined that, in cases where information was available about attempts to end relationships or make law enforcement reports, 62% of homicides occurred within two weeks of an attempt to end the relationship and 33% of homicides occurred within two weeks of law enforcement reports.\textsuperscript{19} These tragic outcomes repeated in 2017: Rubin Edwards threatened to kill Lindsey Baldonado the day before her murder; he was previously charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Rodrigo Rodriguez killed his girlfriend Ruby Rodriguez ten days after being released from jail on a family violence charge; he had a previous conviction for a family violence charge. It remains critical to understand each survivor’s experience, as some perpetrators maintain their threatening and coercive behaviors indefinitely after the relationship ends and offer multiple opportunities for intervention.

Aurora Lopez experienced repeated stalking and intimidation from her abusive ex-boyfriend, Charles Werchan, two years after she broke up with him. Even after Werchan attempted to kidnap Ibeth at church, he was able to evade any accountability and later murdered her.

Means of Death

In 2017, 88 perpetrators (65%) used firearms to kill their current or former intimate partners. Twenty-one perpetrators (15%) stabbed and killed their partners, 12 men (9%) strangled and killed their intimate partners, and 12 men (9%) used other means, including physical assault, arson, suffocation, and vehicular assault. The cause of death in three cases where the victims were missing for an extended time was not released.

In 2017, eight victims were 70 or older; in five of these homicides, the perpetrators also killed themselves. Seven of the eight homicides were perpetrated with a firearm. Researchers estimate that approximately 33% of people over the age of 65 own a firearm and another 12% of those over 65 live with someone who owns a firearm. Safety planning and risk assessments should include assessment of firearm access in elderly populations. Additionally, this continuing trend prompts questions examining the safety and resource needs of this population.

Firearms and Domestic Violence

Statistics show that abusers with access to firearms are more likely to kill their partners in domestic violence situations than those without access.21 The presence of a gun in the home increases the risk of fatal intimate partner violence by 500%. Nationwide, a firearm is the weapon of choice in 53% of intimate partner femicides; however, in Texas, the proportion was 65% in 2017.22 Abusers choose firearms to intimidate and kill their partners more than all other means of force combined.

The brandishing of firearms against domestic violence survivors stems from a desire for intimidation and coercive control. “Hostile gun displays are often acts of domestic violence directed against women,” according to Harvard

School of Public Health researchers, who note that "hostile gun displays against family members may be more common than gun use in self-defense." In a survey of domestic violence survivors, 22% reported that their partners had threatened to kill them, their family members, friends, or pets with a gun, with one in ten reporting a partner shooting a gun during an argument.

Gun violence tied to domestic violence also occurs outside of private homes. Research reveals that over half of recent mass shootings, defined by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) as a shooting in which the perpetrator kills four or more people, involved intimate partners or other family members. In the United States, domestic violence offenders accounted for 54% of the perpetrators of mass shootings from 2009 to 2016. In 18% of mass shootings, law enforcement officers had previously charged the perpetrator with domestic violence. In Honoring Texas Victims, TCFV recorded four intimate partner homicides that fit the definition of a mass shooting since 2012.

Sadly, the Sutherland Springs church shooting of November 5, 2017, where Devin Patrick Kelley killed 26 people and injured 20 others, propelled the intersection of domestic violence, firearms, and mass shootings into the national spotlight. Kelley targeted his mother-in-law and shattered a community and a nation.

Just two months earlier, on September 10, 2017, Spencer Hight entered his wife Meredith’s home in Plano as she hosted a gathering to watch a Dallas Cowboys game. Hight shot and killed Meredith and seven of her friends, wounding another guest. Hight had a history of domestic violence against Meredith. For her, this gathering of friends represented an attempt to begin a new chapter in her life after filing for divorce a month before.

These high-profile shootings shine a spotlight on gaps in the enforcement system of existing firearm laws that prohibit gun possession by domestic violence offenders. In an analysis of mass shootings between 2009 and

In 2016, law enforcement officers had ordered 34% of the perpetrators to surrender their firearms or had placed other prohibitions on them. Both Texas and federal law bar convicted domestic abusers from gun ownership, but without enforcement protocols in place and adequate criminal database information, authorities often have no means of disarming offenders, leaving many survivors and the community at a higher risk for fatalities.

In 2018, Texas Senator John Cornyn introduced and the President signed into law federal legislation to fix the FBI’s National Instant Criminal Background Check System (NICS). The bill’s authors designed it to ensure accurate and complete background checks. Although this action is a positive step in tracking citizens prohibited from possessing firearms, local jurisdictions still need to implement surrender protocols and best practices to ensure adequate enforcement and decrease the risk of domestic violence fatalities.

Investing in Forward-Thinking Approaches: Addressing Firearms and Strangulation

Background checks and permit-to-purchase laws are necessary to prevent the purchase of firearms by prohibited individuals. Similarly, firearm surrender protocols are designed to ensure prohibited possessors relinquish weapons once they belong to a class of prohibited possessors. Surrender protocols informed, developed, and implemented at the local community level to enforce federal statues can bolster overall community safety. For example, in Dallas County, the community developed and implemented a robust firearm surrender process in a public/private sector approach led by Judge Roberto Cañas. While other factors likely contributed, domestic violence homicides with a firearm in Dallas County decreased the last three years, as shown in each year’s Honoring Texas Victims report from nine domestic violence homicides in 2015 to seven in 2016 to five in 2017.

An offender’s use of strangulation as a form of abuse provides insight into the perpetrator’s likelihood of later killing his/her partner. Although in 2017 strangulation was the means of homicide for nine percent of women killed in Texas, the use of strangulation can significantly predict an abuser’s escalation toward lethal violence. In 43% of cases where an intimate partner later kills a woman, the perpetrator assaulted her by strangulation in the previous year. Survivors of strangulation are seven times more likely to be murdered by the same partner who hurt them.

In 2009, the Texas legislature passed a law codifying strangulation and suffocation as a third-degree felony in cases of domestic violence, punishable from two to 10 years for the first offense and up to 20 years for those with a prior domestic violence conviction. Section 22.01 of the Texas Penal Code defines strangulation as a criminal offense “...committed by intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly impeding the normal breathing or circulation of the blood of the person by applying pressure to the person’s throat or neck or by blocking the person’s nose or mouth.”

The increase in the penalty for strangulation changed the criminal justice system’s prioritization of strangulation cases and aided the prosecution of offenders; however, gaps still exist in the training of first responders, identifying strangulation cases, gathering of forensic evidence, and addressing victims’ critical health needs.

27  Id.
29  18 U.S.C. 922(G).
30  TCFV acknowledges with appreciation the contribution to this report by Kelsey McKay, President of RESPOND Against Violence and Founder of McKay Training & Consulting, LLC.
Training on the identification of strangulation is inconsistent across Texas. Many first responders receive little to no direction on how to identify and investigate strangulation cases. Consequently, they do not collect critical evidence at the scene and lose the opportunity for valuable documentation. An investment in training for first responders increases the efficacy of the investigation and saves detectives time tracking down a victim for a statement.

In addition to strangulation training for first responders, investment in a strangulation supplement to police reports increased disposition numbers in communities where officers receive guidance on use. Before implementation of a strangulation supplement in Austin, the Austin Police Department limited their investigation procedure to asking the victim “Could you breathe?” with no exploration of symptoms like dizziness, nausea, disorientation, changes in voice, or changes in vision or hearing. After the implementation of a strangulation supplement in 2013, the quality of evidence collection markedly increased. The number of filed strangulation cases related to domestic violence now ranges from 600 to 700 a year.

“The use of the strangulation form has become vital for these types of investigations,” says Detective Kimberly Orts of the Travis County Sheriff’s Office. “It allows even the most inexperienced officers to be thorough and teaches them to focus on symptoms beyond visible injury. Furthermore, victims of strangulation would not know to provide this information to law enforcement because they may not associate what they’ve experienced with the strangulation act itself.”

Complementing early identification and the use of a strangulation supplement, forensic exams by a medical professional bolster the quality of evidence collection and provide survivors a more thorough healthcare response. Access to a forensic nurse can increase the quality of evidence since the exam is performed in a less stressful setting than a crime scene. Additionally, the forensic exam setting allows nurses to focus primarily on patients’ health needs, in marked contrast to an interview at a crime scene.

A coordinated community response would best address the myriad needs of strangulation victims. Training, guidance and proper accountability can both lower the number of homicides and reduce the severity of short- and long-term health consequences for survivors.

Impact on Communities: County Data

Intimate partner homicides occurred in 42 Texas counties in 2017. Harris County, which includes the city of Houston, had 29 homicides, an increase from 28 in 2016. Bexar County, which includes the city of San Antonio, had 18 homicides in 2017, representing a troubling trend of increases each year since 2014. Tarrant County, which includes the cities of Fort Worth and Arlington, had 12 homicides in 2017, a decrease from 13 in 2016. Dallas County, which includes the city of Dallas, had eight homicides in 2017, a decrease from 13 in 2016. Collin County, which includes the city of Plano, had seven homicides in 2017, an increase from six in 2016; Collin County has also experienced increases each year since 2014.

In 2017, 65% of homicides occurred in counties with populations of 500,000 or more. 33 Information provided by Travis County District Attorney’s Office.

34 Any decrease in domestic violence homicides in a community is promising, though ongoing assessment is necessary to evaluate if these decreases represent a positive trend, and if so, what factors contribute to the sustained decrease.
followed by Collin and Fort Bend (1.3 homicides per 100,000 female residents), and Harris and Tarrant (1.2 homicides per 100,000 female residents).

The chart below includes all counties with populations over 500,000 where at least one family violence homicide occurred between 2012-2016, listed in alphabetical order.

NARRATIVES OF WOMEN KILLED BY THEIR INTIMATE PARTNER IN TEXAS IN 2017

On the following pages, the Texas Council on Family Violence lists with great respect the names of each victim of intimate partner femicide in 2017.

Each confirmed fatality represents a woman killed by a male intimate partner or a stalking perpetrator and includes the date of the woman’s death, the city in which she was killed or the jurisdiction of the investigation, followed by a short description of the circumstances with a focus on language that holds the offender accountable. TCFV includes additional relevant information when available through media and law enforcement reports that highlight lethality risk factors and other information that informs our best practices for enhancing future survivor safety.

Intimate partner homicides end the lives of women who have roles as engaged community members and caring and loving family members. TCFV joins their families, friends and communities in mourning their loss.

James Morris, 53, shot his wife Michelle at her home. He also shot and killed Michelle's boyfriend James Brantley, 24. Morris then shot himself; he died from his injuries at the hospital. Their three children were in the home. Emergency responders transported Michelle to the hospital, where she died the next day. Morris had a history of domestic violence, including assault and strangulation charges; a month prior to the shooting, Michelle obtained a protective order against Morris. Michelle is survived by her three teenage children.

TAYLOR COUNTY

Jennifer Cunningham, 40
ABILENE | MAY 3, 2017
Christopher Hale, 45, shot and killed his ex-girlfriend Jennifer outside her home as she tried to enter her vehicle. Several neighbors reported hearing gunshots. Hale fled the scene and then shot and killed himself. Hale had a history of controlling and abusive behavior. After Jennifer ended the relationship several months prior to her murder, Hale continued to stalk and harass her. Jennifer is survived by her two adult children.

TRAVIS COUNTY

Paisley Langmade, 37
AUSTIN | JUNE 21, 2017
Caleb Harris, 31, stabbed and killed his wife Paisley in their home. He then killed himself. A 911 caller requested an urgent welfare check. Law enforcement entered the home and discovered their bodies. Law enforcement indicated they had responded to the home more than once in the year preceding Paisley's murder.

Andrea Faye Lindsey, 43
AUSTIN | DECEMBER 15, 2017

Aubrey Garrett, 50, stabbed and killed his girlfriend Andrea in the courtyard of his brother’s apartment. Neighbors witnessing the assault called 911. Law enforcement responded; Garrett continued to stab Andrea. After being shot by an officer, Garrett was transported to the hospital. Emergency responders attempted to save Andrea, but she died on scene. Authorities arrested and charged Garrett with murder. Andrea is survived by her son.

Ibeth Aurora Lopez, 26
DEL VALLE | FEBRUARY 15, 2017

Charles Werchan, 26, shot and killed his ex-girlfriend Ibeth on a public road. He then shot himself. Werchan had entered Ibeth’s place of employment and demanded she come with him; when she resisted, he threatened her with a gun and forced her to leave. Later, as two deputies approached them in their vehicle, Werchan shot and killed Ibeth and then shot himself. Werchan was transported to a hospital and died the next day. One hour before the murder Werchan posted a video of himself with the gun on social media. Werchan had a history of violence towards Ibeth. She had ended the relationship two years prior, however, Werchan continued to stalk and harass her. Three weeks before the murder, Ibeth had called law enforcement for help when Werchan approached her at her church and attempted to force her into a car. Werchan fled before law enforcement could arrest him but returned a second time and continued to harass her. Ibeth is survived by her daughter, age 8.

HONORING TEXAS VICTIMS REPORT METHODOLOGY

Each year, TCFV publishes Honoring Texas Victims: Family Violence Fatalities revealing the stories of women killed by their male intimate partners in Texas and offering data analysis on the nature of the femicides as they occurred in the previous year. This report includes only family violence cases where a male perpetrator murdered an intimate partner during the time frame of January 1, 2017 to December 31, 2017 and was charged or committed suicide. In order to identify all female victims of intimate violence homicides in 2017, TCFV monitored media in all 254 Texas counties and reviewed law enforcement and County and District Attorneys’ communication releases. In addition, TCFV researched each femicide case with local and state partners. TCFV took care to confirm the accuracy of information through various means, primarily law enforcement, Department of Public Safety, media, victim advocates, and family violence service providers.

TCFV has been documenting and analyzing deaths of women killed by a male intimate partner for 38 years. It is a deliberate decision to analyze and report this very specific relationship type. It is not intended to diminish anyone’s pain and suffering who may have lost a loved one in an intimate partner homicide not represented within this narrow approach. Our philosophy is strongly rooted in the recognition that intimate partner homicides disproportionately affect women in heterosexual relationships. We believe elevating awareness, monitoring trends, and looking for solutions in these homicides will by design have positive impact and raise awareness of all intimate partner homicides. We are also acutely aware of further considerations such as in same sex partner homicides. We are considering expanding our report to include aggregate data, taking care that discussing this type of relationship without being able to gain consent from the victim may bring complexity to their families. Of significant note, the body of research on women who use violence indicates that women’s use of violence most often occurs in response to violence against them by their male partners, that women and men generally use violence that differs in level of severity, and that women’s use of violence is not connected to coercive control in the same way as men’s.38

TCFV acknowledges that significant barriers to safety remain for survivors of intimate partner violence, particularly those from communities of color, immigrant communities and the LGBTQ+ community. A 2017 report published by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention emphasizes the “importance of targeting prevention and intervention efforts to populations at disproportionately high risk.” Intimate partner homicides and domestic violence occur across all races and ethnicities, but African American/black women (4.4 per 100,000) and American Indian/Alaska Native women (4.3 per 100,000) are disproportionately represented among homicide victims. 39

Key protections for immigrant survivors of domestic violence exist under statute; however, a 2017 survey of advocates and legal service providers indicated that survivors are experiencing heightened concerns about seeking legal remedies to support their safety because of increased enforcement efforts. Seventy-five percent of advocates surveyed reported that immigrant survivors have concerns about going to court, and 43% reported having worked with an immigrant survivor who dropped criminal and civil cases because of their fears regarding immigration policy enforcement. 40 Lack of meaningful language access and legal representation reinforce perceived barriers to safety. 41

Prevalence rates for intimate partner violence in the LGBTQ community match and sometimes exceed rates of violence women experience at the hands of their male partners and LGBTQ victims are less likely to reach out to law enforcement or domestic violence shelters. Recent studies have highlighted the prevalence of partner violence in the LGBTQ community. Lesbian women and gay men experience partner violence at equal to higher rates than heterosexual individuals. Bisexual women experience a higher prevalence of partner violence than heterosexual women. 42 In a study conducted by the National Coalition of Anti-Violence Programs (NCAVP), it was identified that transgender women, especially women of color, are two times more likely to experience threats, intimidation, and harassment within their relationships. 43 In Texas, 20 LGBTQ victims have been killed by intimate partners since 2012, including one in 2017.45

As we strengthen efforts to work in a coordinated manner with agencies throughout Texas communities with the singular goal of reducing barriers to services for survivors and enhancing lethality reduction efforts, centering the experiences of survivors from marginalized communities will identify gaps in policy and systems response that strengthen the safety net for all survivors. Continuing the work to provide culturally and linguistically relevant, trauma informed services will expand access to community services and criminal justice systems that provide life-saving resources.

Lastly, TCFV acknowledges the limitations of this report. Several homicides related to family violence go unmentioned in this report. These include incidents where abusive ex-partners shot and injured their intimate partner victim and killed family members and friends in the attacks. Additionally, TCFV reviewed complex cases that demonstrate the risk and vulnerability of young women, but fall outside the scope of this report, Jennifer Delgado, 15, in San Antonio killed by Armando Garcia-Ramires, her former stepfather who also fathered her children through a non-consensual relationship and Layla Ramos, 14, in Humble killed by Anthony Valle, 43, who had a non-consensual relationship with her.

These deaths further underscore the vulnerability of women and girls and those closest to them.

ABOUT TCFV

Texas Council on Family Violence is the only statewide nonprofit in Texas dedicated solely to creating safer communities and freedom from family violence. With the collective strength of more than 1,300 members, TCFV shapes public policy, equips service providers, and initiates strategic prevention efforts with statewide reach and direct local impact. Since 1978, TCFV has been regarded as the statewide expert, think tank, and training entity for domestic violence programs and intersecting systems, including civil and criminal justice, child support and welfare, economic and workforce organizations, healthcare, and the general public.

This project was funded by the Texas Health and Human Services Commission, the United States Department of Health and Human Services, and by Award No. 3073102 awarded by the Criminal Justice Division of the Office of the Governor.

The Texas Council on Family Violence promotes safe and healthy relationships by supporting service providers, facilitating strategic prevention efforts, and creating opportunities for freedom from domestic violence.
